

Over the years there have been major changes in fishing on Long Island and with them changes in the fishing industry. Party boats started out as converted yachts, ex-WW I subchasers and old wooden 45 and 50-footers. In the 70s, the drive was to bigger, faster and more creature-comfort, aluminum supercruisers. Today we are seeing the older, smaller 65-footers beginning to make a comeback. The offshore boats are still the high-end craft, but if you notice, the local headboats are downsizing.

The biggest change that I see is in the 6-pack charter industry. Years ago the 6-packs were confined to trolling charters, like Ron Leper's Kim, the pioneer of bunker spoon trolling, bluefish and football tuna trolling or chumming sharks and tuna. The hardcore wreck fishing was still the domain of the headboat captains. With the advances in electronics, better boats and economic changes, the 6-pack captains have changed to being some of the best at wreck fishing for blackfish, cod, pollock and sea bass.

Once you would have expected your charter to be on a high-end flybridge sportfisherman with the entire microwave, air-conditioned fluff. Now Downeasters are the rule, rigged specifically for wreck fishing with a lot of investment in ground tackle, custom pulpits and pot haulers. From Staten Island to Montauk and Orient, you can find a 30-foot class charter boat that can put you on fish, from the local reefs to the deep water wrecks, any time of the year and keep you on them. So, when it comes to serious wreck fishing, if you aren't up to speed, get a group together and experience a slammer instead of a bust.

Everyone with a boat who intends to fish should have his or her rig in the water by mid-May. Wait until Memorial Day and you will be on line waiting for your yard to get past the rush. Fishing opportunities specific to May that you should focus on are mackerel, squid, weakfish and fluke. Mackerel will pass by anytime from the last week of April to the second week of May. Mother's Day used to be the high point of the western south shore run. If you intend to bag-up on mackerel for shark bait and chum, the broiler or the smoker, it's important either to have the boat shaken down and the tackle rigged or to keep your eye on the party boat reports. Mackerel will come through fast and your window will be short Squid show up at Greenport anywhere from May through June. Squid jigging is messy and strange to our ears, but it has been catching on big-time over the past few years. Squid have been the norm up north for years, but so has smelt fishing. Whatever! You can jig squid right off the docks at Greenport and for bait they are great, even better as stuffed calamari with some ricotta and marinara sauce. Like herring jigging, light spinning tackle is the way to go, but look for some squid jigs. Squid jigs don't have hooks. They are covered with protruding pins that the squid get hung on, and then they squirt ink on you when they come out of the water. Dress down for squid; use raingear and leave the designer jeans at home.

The post-spawn weakfish run at Ocean Beach kicks off in May, all things and seasons being equal. Sandworms, Berkeley Power sandworms, white or yellow bucktails in 1/4 and 1/2-ounce tipped with squid, jelly worms in Motor Oil, white and strawberry or plain squid strips are best bets. The fleet will be drifting, so if you want to anchor and chum or cast, get out of the way and off to the edges. Go light for weakfish, baitcasters and spinners with 10-pound test being the heaviest. I'd stick with ultra-light and 6 or 8-pound. Party boats from Captree will be sailing evening trips for the weakfish, and you may see some day-boats too if the fluke regs are onerous.

The third week of May is when the jumbo fluke show up at Orient and Greenport. Rig big - use whole small squid, sea robin, mackerel or bergal fillets, jumbo spearing, smelts and tinker mackerel or finger herring. If you have frozen peanut bunker from last season, dig them out; they can be deadly. Places to try are the Ruins, Greenlawns, Horton's Point, the channel between Greenport and Shelter Island, or pretty much any hard, gravel or sticky bottom, not reefs or wrecks, but low-lying structure. Be prepared to sacrifice tackle and keep the line from your sinker to your three-way swivel lighter than your main-line. Better to lose the sinker than the fish.

The south shore west will have ling and the start of sea bass on the inshore bottom, stripers on clams and chum, and flounder in Raritan Bay, the Cedars, Romer Shoal, J-Bay and the Coney Island Flats. The docklines in Reynold's Channel should give up some flounder in late May as whatever is in the back heads for the inlet. Same with Jone's Inlet. The Big M, Coast Guard Station and Jone's Beach Pier pocket should have a few flounder.

Fire Island Inlet will offer the same with flounder at the Sore Thumb. Bluefish should start their charge into the bay, so be ready with tins. You may get some good-sized fluke around the inlet entrance, the inshore fingers or around the reef.

Orient, Montauk and the north shore will still be banging blackfish. Go with the usual rigs, but the bait may need to be soft, clams or conch. In the spring, the tog tend to give up on the crabs and show more of an interest in clams.

Moriches Bay flounder fishing was great guns last year from late May through the June closer, and maybe some snowshoes at Tobbaccolot or Block Island. Check with Gary at Silly Lily for reports; just repay the help with some business. Look for stripers in the east cut on chum, maybe some plugging in the east cut and, of course, bluefish in the inlet. At Shinnecock, head for the canal and Quogue Canal for flounder or drift the inlet with clams for stripers. Fluke the inlet and the low ocean structure for the early doormats. The smaller fish will show as the water warms.

Montauk will still have cod and ling, hopefully at Block, Cartwright and Coxes, flounder in the lake may get away with fresh bunker chunks, but it's early yet.

The season is just getting started. Get used to big bait, big-rig fluking. The New York regulation that is being floated at the time of my writing is 19.5 inches. If that's the target, then go 2-ounce buck-tails and big hooks with big baits. Forget the shorts; you can't catch keepers when your rig is out of the water unhooking shorts for the better part of the day. Save the short catch-and-release for the kids.

Grown-up people should be hunting grown-up fluke.

Get ready for serious June striper fishing; shark fishing the starts last week of June, major sea bassing on the inshore spots and prime-time fluke. Hit the tackle shops and hit them often to stock up on gear and local knowledge.

and maybe some snowshoes at Tobbaccolot or Block Island. Check with the locals before committing to snowshoes. Off-shore and long-distance wreck trips from Montauk are becoming more and more popular. The Viking trips produce huge numbers of fish and plenty of the oddballs like wreckfish, tilefish and fluke around the Point, or they may run to Orient if it's worth the ride.

The south shore and west surf casting will be mostly clams for bass and tins or plugs for bluefish. Bucktails will also take plenty of bass, as will rubber shads. Out east, you
